

University Handbook

Let's be honest, the first year can be pretty hard to navigate at university. That is why we came up with the idea of a university handbook, a handy guide to turn to when in need. This source would provide students with quick answers without the fuss of writing emails or making calls. The handbook could be the first resource for students to turn to, listing all available resources at a university. It would also list the different opportunities at the university, contain a map of campuses, and so much more!

What would it include?

- ◆ Map of campuses
- ◆ Volunteering opportunities
- ◆ Information about the students' union
- ◆ Societies, sport clubs
- ◆ Dates of events happening at the university (such as Wellbeing Week, Black History Month, etc.)
- ◆ Where to find help with financial struggles, physical and mental wellbeing

How?

The handbook would be an online resource, making it easier to carry and more accessible than a physical booklet. This way, the handbook could also be edited every year or when it needs corrections. Furthermore, modern computers can read online text out loud, which would help access the handbook for disabled students.

Who would make it?

Primarily, the handbook would be assembled and designed by students. For this, there would be a handbook society at universities, gathering students interested in the making of this project. This way, students could also use the resources of the university in making the handbook.

Possible challenges

We recognise that this project is not an easy one to carry out. The biggest challenge is making the handbook society and writing the handbook for the first time. We know that this would be a time-consuming process. Besides, as the handbook would be different for each university, it would require individual handbook societies at each university. However, once the first edition of the handbook is done, it would only need some adjustments every year.
